Put out the flag to-morrow.

Incidentally, Boston's preparedness parade was an argument for better roads.

The sophomores of Norwich university are learning something of the rigors of military discipline.

A former Rutland man was "sponsor" for Mrs. Evelyn Thaw at her most recent wedding. We are surprised, only because it was not a Brattleboro man.

The next thing is a denial from Ambassador Gerard in Berlin that he said peace is in sight. It hasn't come yet, but it's expected.

Those Republican delegates at Montpelier appear to have been ignorant of the fact that their distinguished orator from Illinois keeps a presidential bee in his bonnet.—Boston Transcript.

However that may be, Senator Sherman didn't find much honey where Hughes had extracted it all.

Busy folks should pause long enough in their activities to-morrow to pay a tribute to the soldiers and sailors who fought in behalf of the nation 50 years and more ago. It will not be a great tax on their time to watch the parade of the veterans and their escorts, nor to listen to the patriotic exercises which will be held in honor of the former; and if they give the short time needed for the service they will have a sense of having done a little toward paying the tribute that is deserved. The 1916 celebration ought to be the best in a long time of years.

Boston's preparedness parade last Saturday fell far short of the expectations as to numbers. A column of 75,000 had been expected; a column of 45,000 marched. To the person who merely reads of the accomplished event the results may appear somewhat in the light of a failure of plans; but to the observer of the event it must have been a successful demonstration in spite of the fact that scarcely one-half of the expected number participated. Even at the lesser figure it was a great demonstration, and the addition of some thousands would have made no greater impression on the minds of the observers than the partial column of the reality. The partial failure, as it appears to the non-observer, was due to no lack of patriotism on the part of Boston people or to no lack of fidelity to the principle of preparedness but it was largely because Boston endeavored by artificial means to blow itself up to the standard set by the far greater city of New York and fell short of the effort.

GOING BY THE EVIDENCE.

Those who have followed the progress of the infamous Waite murder trial in New York are ready to agree with the statement of one of the assistant prosecutors, that the "verdict (guilty) is in accordance with the testimony." Rarely does a case come to trial in which the proof of guilt is more pronounced than it was in this trial; and that proof of guilt as brought out by testimony was supplemented by the confession of the accused man and his reiterated confession on the witness stand. As far as proof of guilt goes there could be no doubt whatever. It comes, then, to a question of the mental responsibility of the accused person, whether he was mentally sound when the act was committed or whether he was suffering from derangement of the mind which should make him not wholly responsible for his act. On that point too the evidence was conclusively in favor of the belief that young Waite was in full possession of normal mental faculties when he planned his campaign of crime to get rid of his mother-in-law and his father-in-law; the bringing in of the mystical "bad man from Egypt" was a crude attempt to bedevil the situation and really carried little weight. As a matter of fact, the accused man himself was bright enough to perceive that the idea of dual personality was of no avail. And that was his last resort. The jury knew it. Those who had followed the case knew it. Hence the verdict of guilty was by no means a surprise. It would have been a perversion of justice had any other verdict been brought in.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Correction of Recent Communication. Editor, Times: I noticed an error in the article of Friday, May 26, to the children in regard to Memorial day, which, in justice to the author, Dennis A. McCarthy, I would like to correct. The line which should read, "And the eyes that only brightened" was made to read "frightened," and in justice to the printer, I would also add that my duplicate copy told me it was my carelessness in not making more distinction in the changed letter that caused the mistake. The veterans know full well we do not connect "frightened" with their word or deed.

A WEAK PEACE CONDEMNED

A man can serve two masters, politically, at least, and that while a certain element can be counted upon to share with us our profits, they cannot be relied upon to share with us our loyalty to the flag. The daily papers for the last two years, and long before, have hounded before us, in their startling headlines, the questions of loyalty and dual citizenship. "I have been stung at the self-restraint of the citizens of this fair city of Barre, when I have beheld men, carrying through our streets a flag other than the stars and stripes of Old Glory." Can you hear the trumpet note of challenge to you of the spirit of citizenship that moved the boys in blue to fight for this flag?

"It should be America first, last and all the time, and only one flag should float above our heads, the star spangled banner."
"Probably there are those who will say: 'The pupil is not the place to treat this question of preparedness.' At its roots this matter of national preparedness against possible dangers is profoundly a moral and even a spiritual one. Nothing affecting human well-being is alien to the catholicity of the Christian gospel."

"Let us consider the question as it affects the United States. Our people are not jingoes, itching to fly at the unoffending throats of all sundry nor expansionists with envious eyes upon the territories of other nations. We are a peace-loving and industrious commonwealth, intent upon the fruitful conquests of mine and forest and soil; republicans with the vision of a free, enlightened, happy, and contented democracy, who shall build up here, unhindered, a new and simpler civilization as our characteristic contribution to the good of the happier world that is to be."

"Our means of defense should be adequate to our wealth in manhood and material resources against all possible dangers. It is very comfortable and economical to live in a fool's paradise, but in the end it may prove ruinously costly and disastrous, as some European peoples have recently discovered. The horrors of Belgium, of Poland, of Serbia, of a large part of France, if probed a few years ago, would have been scouted as the diseased ravings of a mad imagination. They are ghastly realities today."

"Japan, with only one-tenth the population of China, could not resist the opportunity offered by China's unpreparedness. Between 1797 and 1799, the relations between the United States and France were warlike. The French were attacking our merchant ships and the French minister, Talleyrand, offered a cessation of this annoyance on condition that a payment of $20,000 were made to the French government. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney voiced the sentiment of the infant nation: 'Millions for defense, but not a cent for tribute.' General Washington was authorized to raise an army, and a dozen ships of war were ordered to be built. The work was pushed on; France yielded and broke into your house was averted—because of our preparedness. The burglar, whether an individual or a nation, is much more likely to break into your house if he knows you are unarmed and asleep."

"Jesus said in his day: 'Can ye not discern the signs of the times?' That was a most impressive demonstration that was enacted in New York City just recently. Then, again, only yesterday that wonderful parade in the city of Boston. Conservative Boston! That kind of marching must be taken seriously. It must be regarded as evidence, as an outward and visible expression of what was to thousands who participated a genuine conviction and a solemn sense of duty. We must have our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Men and women do not take a whole day for their customary pursuits or subject themselves to the fatigue and publicity of parading before the eyes of a curious and critical multitude without believing wholeheartedly in the cause for which they witness."

"It is not alone despotism and monarchies that die. Behold the graves of Greece, Rome, Carthage, Venice; and there are fresher graves of short-lived republics in Spanish-America. Mr. Newell D. Hillis said last Sunday in Plymouth pulpit: 'While we need few weeks a Swiss author will publish here in New York a book that contains in the first part extracts from Bernhardi and Von Moltke, with maps, magazine articles, speeches, containing all the plans of the militarists of Germany, published between 1910 and the time of the invasion of Belgium and northern France. The second part of his volume will contain extracts similar in nature and published during the same years, with maps and military plans, looking toward the landing of troops in China, at the port of Buenos, Long Island, Chesapeake bay, and the Pacific coast. Those men of high military position not only worked out these plans, but thought it worth while to publish them. The simple fact in the case is, they are in existence.'"

"Brethren, the trumpet gives out no uncertain sound. Let us listen to its blaring note of warning and challenge, for the voice of the trumpet may be the voice of God. Let us be loyal to America, not merely for the sake of America, but for the world's sake. Thus, and thus only, shall we deliver the nation's soul."

CURRENT COMMENT

The Voice of Vermont.

Vermont Republicans have joined hands with their Oregon brethren in sending to the Chicago convention a delegation instructed for Hughes. The resolution of the Montpelier convention urging his nomination rings with enthusiasm. The delegates are called upon "by their personal efforts and by their vote to support him with the full strength of the state." "His unblemished record, his wide experience, his forceful character and his great intellect" are cited as qualifications that "combine to make him the master hand to navigate the ship of state across the uncharted shoals that are ahead." Here is the clear call for the conscription of Mr. Hughes, which comes from the people through their chosen representatives. It is a call that the Chicago convention would be foolishly not to extend. It is a call that Justice Hughes dare not decline.

Vermont led the way for New England and the nation twenty years ago when the state convention instructed its delegation for McKinley in the face of the plea of Vermont senators and congressmen that Thomas B. Reed of Maine be adopted as Vermont's favorite son. The Republicans of the Green Mountain state in refusing in 1916 to waste their time in compromise to any local candidate, again demonstrate by their endorsement of a national favorite for the presidency the foresight, the judgment and the freedom from localism which are essential to true nationalism. It will be a misfortune if the Republicans of Massachusetts are not represented at Chicago by a delegation equally farsighted and equally fearless.—Boston Transcript.
